Fanophiles:

Last issue we were in Hawaii where the Dave Navarro epoch configuration of the Red Hot Chili Peppers was bonding. They snorkeled and skydived. Foraged the forests and jumped off cliffs into waterfalls. They brought their own Harleys and marauded the islands under the band's nom d' MC gang, "The Sensatives". They satiated on exotic tropical fruits and cavorted with the natives. And they even got in a little rehearsing. After a couple months it was back to LA to regain their urban footing, take care of business and to start the actual recording of the long awaited new CD from Warner Bros., produced again by the resplendently resourceful wunderkind, Rick Rubin, who also did BSSMagik. After laying down most of the tracks, actual completion was put on hold to begin rehearsal for Woodstock, which would be their first live performance with Navarro. And they tested the results by springing a few surprise gigs in small clubs like Johnny Dep's Viper Room and Hollywood's venerable Club Lingerie (see review). It all paid off with a spectacular show at Woodstock before an estimated 350,000. After a week in New York City with two more intimate and unpublicized shows at Roseland Ballroom and the Academy, it was off to Europe for a headline tour of festivals in Dublin; Belgium; Reading, England; Madrid; Copenhagen; and Germany. Now we're back in the states. Anthony's laying down vocal tracks in New York, and hopefully the CD will be released in early 1995 so we can start the U.S. tour. The band will play at the Rosebowl in Pasadena, California with the Rolling Stones on October 19 and 21, 1994, but all other previously announced dates have been suspended except that the band will be playing Santiago, Chile and Buenos Aires, Argentina between December 12 and 17, 1994 with the possible addition of other South American dates and maybe Mexico City. We hope to play Australia, Japan and Europe in 1995. EMI (the band's label before Warner Bros.) plans a pre-Christmas marketing of "Out in LA", a CD of unreleased demo tapes from the band's earliest sessions with the late Hillel Slovak on guitar and Jack Irons on drums. Although they were original members along with Anthony and Flea, they were contractually prevented from performing on the first album. We've got two new T-shirts: a black tour shirt with dates and places on the back (Woodstock to Rosebowl) and a purple and silver logo in front, and a white T-shirt with prison gang tattoo motif. We've acquired five live underground performance videos from 1986, 1989, 1991, and 1992. And we're working on a light bulb outfit poster. Next issue January 1995.

Red Hot Chili Peppers

Club Lingerie, Hollywood
Wednesday, Aug. 10

By Marc Pollack

Ironing out any kinks that might mar their scheduled performance at Woodstock '94 on Sunday, the Red Hot Chili Peppers seemed in a surprise appearance to have reached at last the potential that fans and critics assumed was there since the band formed over 10 years ago.

The multi-Platinum group, which could easily sell out the 16,000-seat Great Western Forum if they so desired, offered choice selections from their catalog as well as new ditties off their eagerly anticipated next Warner Bros. record, due early next year. It will be the second release produced by production wizard Rick Rubin, whose honing of the band's sound has propelled them to star status.

Plagued by drug and personnel problems throughout their turbulent career, the Red Hot Chili Peppers truly smoke with their current lineup. New guitarist Dave Navarro, formerly the lead for the now-defunct Jane's Addiction, proved a tremendous addition to the band, as the pioneering Los Angeles-based quartet pummeled the Lingerie with harsh, quick fretwork and the group's trademark rap-happy party chants.

Opening with 1991's hit "Give It Away," the Chili Peppers' trademark chaotic in-your-face live charge, which has yet to be captured on any of their releases, was in full effect. Working off each other and tighter than tight, bassist Flea, hands-down the best bass player in alternative music today, and drummer Chad Smith, no lightweight either behind his kit, drove the set to its climactic finish.

And with frontman Anthony Kiedis' frantic stage histrionics and in-better-than-usual voice, the Red Hot Chili Peppers tore the roof off the place, performing ripping ver-

"The band wanted a name which everyone would know, and one day, while walking in the Hollywood Hills, Anthony stumbled upon it, glowing, he insisted, from 'a psychedelic bush that had band names on it'."
True Men Don't Kill Coyotes - Dave Thompson

The biggest band in the world right now, the band who took their name from a psychedelic bush that had band names on it, are in a rehearsal studio in downtown Los Angeles. Various road crew and hangers-on Chad is joined by newest member, former Jane's Addiction guitarist, Dave Navarro. At this moment in time, here in LA, Rock City, USA, he is probably the coolest man in the world. Stripped to the waist, skate shorts, pierced nipples, he looks the very epitome of the 1994 alternative rock star. Navarro is quick to dismiss any continuing rumour-mongering of a rift between himself and Perry Farrell - "I love the guy". He is equally keen to play down the enormous effect he is likely to have on the band's sound - if rock guitar means anything to you, Dave is something of a god amongst axe men.

WE'VE SPURNED them from our clubs, laughed at their hair and their novelty turns, and for years we didn't buy their records. But now, in a week's time at Reading, the kingdom is theirs. They will pull down their pants, gurn, flex and cavort like no other festival headliner for years. We will get to see Anthony's "light bulb" outfit, their torsos, tattoos and pierced nipples. And, if their claims are true, they will give us all "a huge erection".
-NME

For Head Honcho and the RockinfreakApotamus:

Going to the "Red Hot Chili Peppers" concert in Madrid is one of the best things that have happened to me lately.

It was very different to what I imagined and they had a new surprise every moment. When the crowd heard the first notes of "Give it Away" they went absolutely mad. Anthony made everybody swing their T-shirts in the air to "Higher Ground"; it was great!!

Maybe Las Ventas bullring wasn't the best place to have it but the Chili Peppers made us forget that.

I think Dave Navarro is genius. He's a real Chili Pepper.

PUKKELPOP94

29 AUGUST 1994

After two days I am still recovering from the experience called " PUKKEL POP '94 " .
It was a great event and I seen a lots of bands I never heard about before !
But the one reason I was on the festival was of course the performance of the RED HOT CHILI PEPPERS and to be sure to have a really good spot to see the show and to make a few shots with my trowaway camera , I went 4 hours before the show through the crowd of people to the front of the pit.
4 Hours of Rain , Mud , Cold and Pain !
It was terrible to stand there and to feel the presure of the people that went crazy on the music of Frank Black , Cypress Hill and the Levellers .
ironwall of the pit in my stomach .
But now back to the show , compared by Woodstock the show at Pukkelpop was really fantastic.
Such a light show and musical perfect sound even with the minor trouble that Anthony had with his microfoon .
The most people I asked after the show didnt' even notice it , but one thing they where all be impressed by the great lightshow and the podium with the spinning wheel and ofcourse the beautiful drumsset of chad with the octoppussy on it .
The guitarplay from Dave was a really new sound but it was good , very good !

RED HOT CHILI PEPPERS

platinum power

Back when Jaime Rishar was still in junior high, she wallpapered her closet door with pictures of Cindy Crawford. Now, at 18, the Pittsburgh-area native has achieved near Cindy status herself. Like Cindy, who broke the "mole barrier" with her beauty-mark-turned-trademark, Jaime's taking modeling to new heights: At a mere five-foot-six, she's the only "vertically challenged" supermodel to strut her stuff on the runways of Paris, Milan, and New York.

"Sure, she's shorter than your average supermodel," says Michael Flutie, president of Company Model Management, who discovered Jaime at a model search when she was 16. But she wasn't short on personality. "What makes Jaime successful is a combination of classic beauty, self-confidence, and the ability to transform herself in front of the camera. Today, you can be anywhere between five-five and six-two and be a great model, as long as you project the right attitude."

And as long as you're willing to take the right beauty risks. When Jaime first moved to New York, she cropped her superlong locks short

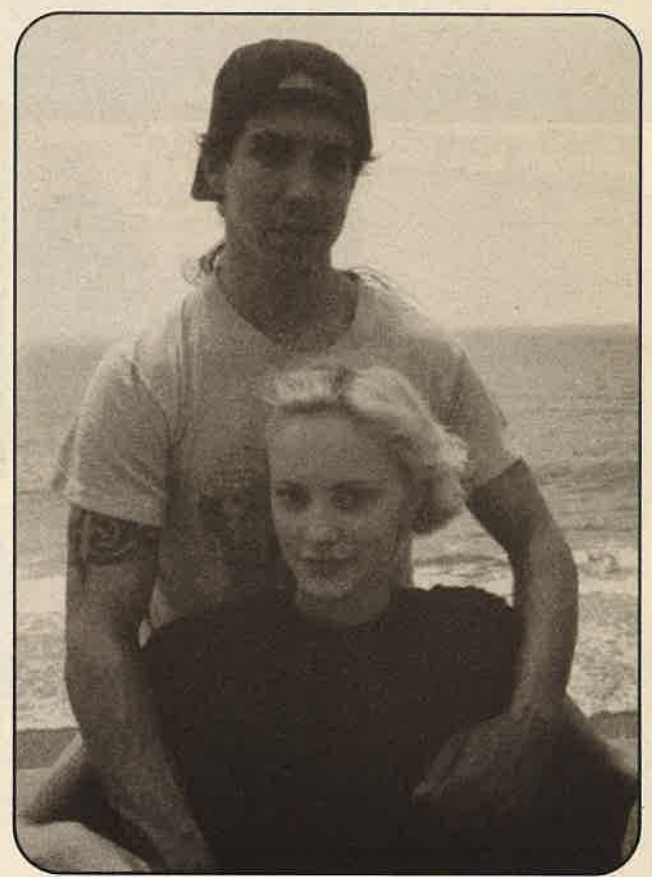

"to make me look taller." That paved the way for her magazine debut in seventeen's July 1993 issue ("Cut Loose!"), but it wasn't until she dyed her hair platinum last fall that her career went platinum, too. Suddenly she was doing shoots for every major fashion magazine and runway stints for Chanel, Anna Sui, and Calvin Klein. In fact, Jaime's schedule is now so jam-packed that her idea of fun is sleeping until 3:00 PM and watching Roseanne reruns in her bathrobe.

But it hasn't been a total snooze. Along the way, Jaime's made some new friends: model pals Christy, Naomi, and Kate, and more-than-pal Anthony Kiedis, of Red Hot Chili Pepper fame ("We go to Six Flags and ride the Batman roller coaster").

What's next on Jaime's agenda? Her modeling success may be a tough act to follow, but this ambitious blond's got her sights set on an acting career. It might seem like a tall order, but she's beaten the odds before. —Elizabeth Brous

Dear Mr. Head Honcho and Rockinfreakapotamus
 I feel highly honored by becoming one of Rockinfreakapotamus people.
 And, I'm so surprised that you are very very gentlemanly. Because you took notice of a little girl like me in a Far Eastern region.
 Now, may RHCP, Rockinfreakapotamus and you be glorious forever!

Very truly yours,
 Rite.

VID GRID

New CD-ROM game is a puzzle with a rock base

Newsday

The idea of trying to solve a puzzle while at the same time listening to hard rock might not be your idea of relaxation, unless maybe you're between 10 and 25 years old.

A record company and a software publisher Monday said they have developed such a CD-ROM computer game, Vid Grid, that they hope will find an audience of preteens and people in their 20s.

Vid Grid, its producers said, will be the first CD-ROM game ever released by a major record label.

The game, produced by Geffen Records of Los Angeles and Jasmine Multimedia Publishing, a publisher of computer discs known as CD-ROMS in Los Angeles, represents one of the early marriages between the hard rock and computer industries. A few years ago, the silver discs were mostly used to store dry statistical data, but they have been making their way into home office and entertainment rooms.

Vid Grid is largely a high-tech moving jigsaw puzzle. A computer screen divided into squares plays a music video, but the picture contained in the squares is scrambled. A player has to unscramble the screen and put the picture together before the video ends.

It sounds relatively simple, but the composition of each square is constantly changing, and there can be as many as 36 squares on the screen at any one time.

As such, the game is a cross between an old-fashioned, hand-held puzzle, and Tetris, the Nintendo game in which differently shaped clusters of squares drift down from the top of the screen and must be neatly interlocked at the screen's bottom.

Vid Grid, which is to retail for under $30 and be available this fall at book and computer stores, includes nine videos by such MTV stars as Peter Dinklage, Aerosmith, Metallica, Guns N' Roses and Red Hot Chili Peppers.

It uses Microsoft Corp.'s new Video for Windows 1.1 software, which provides architecture to play video on the Windows operating system.

"Everyone's been struggling

Red hot on Vid Grid are the Red Hot Chili Peppers. The band members, from top to bottom, are Flea, John Frusciante, Chad Smith and Anthony Kiedis.

Dear Head Honcho,

P.S. I would like to thank you for answering my letter. It is not often ~~now~~ in this day and age that you get a real, personal response. I know it wasn't much, it was your signature and you had a hand-written response to my question, but it means alot to me to know you guys actually care about your fans. Thanks.
